,924,844, filed Oct. 31, 2003, U.S. Ser. No. 10/979,064, filed Nov. 21, 2004, now U.S. Pat. No. 7,122,976, issued Oct. 17, 2006, and U.S. Ser. No. 11/131,694, filed May 24, 2005, now U.S. Pat. No. 7,378,937, issued May 27, 2008. The disclosure of all of the foregoing documents is incorporated herein by reference in its entirety. Polymers, polymers in latex form, and other polymeric materials are often used to coat substrates. In the coating of these substrates, it is desirable to avoid overly thick coatings that can make it difficult for the substrate to be subsequently handled. It is also desirable to minimize the amount of the polymer that ends up in the effluent. The present technology utilizes a dual operation processing approach. The coated substrate is given a first bath operation in the presence of a first coagulant that preferentially deposits the thickest portion of the polymer in the first bath and the remainder of the polymer in the substrate is preferentially deposited in the second bath, which has a lower pH than the first bath. As a result, the processing can be more efficient as compared to processing methods that separate out only the polymer from the effluent. The addition of the first coagulant to the first bath may be enhanced by adding additional amounts of free acid or base. For some substrates, it may be desirable to add an additional amount of base to increase the pH. Also, the addition of a free acid to the processing solution may aid in dissolution of the polymer. It is desirable to add a free acid even when the polymer is in latex form as in the present technology, as the latex-polymer will not dissolve under basic conditions. As used herein, the term "coagulant" refers to any agent that promotes the coalescence of a polymer (e.g., monomer, polymer, or mixture of the two) and is present in at least a portion of the processing solution, in the baths, or in both. A coagulant may include, for example, polymeric flocculants, other polymeric flocculants, anionic or cationic coagulants, and/or combinations of the two. As used herein, the term "
