“The atmosphere was really good, and the enemy attacks were distinctive.” “The graphics have a unique atmosphere, and the game was entertaining.” “There were strong feelings that this game will be a success among gamers who love the fantasy genre.” “This game is also a good game for competitive fighting fans.” Link: Link: The Dark God Belt The Dark God Belt is a new card game developed by the Chinese developer Numero System. When the game was first revealed at the Japan trade fair IGTCU(International Game Trade Show” held in late 2018, the market was super hyped up after that particular news because it was a new game by the creator of the beloved board game “Magic: The Gathering”. Unfortunately, the game was yet to be officially released and only a prototype and an alpha version of it was made available online for playtesting. Because the game was revealed to be very much like a kind of competitive strategy card game, we decided to write a review on it, so you know why you are reading this review and what you can do to get this card game if you would want to get it. In this article, we are going to focus on the possible comparisons of this card game with the board game “Magic: The Gathering” and to what extent it is similar to the board game. The Game Play The gameplay of the card game is quite different with that of its board game counterpart “Magic: The Gathering” and also very different from most of the other board games of its genre. Instead of being a strategy card game where the only focus is on gameplay, the game is actually a deck building RPG. Because the card game is a deck building RPG, you get to bring a large collection of cards from your deck and then you have to invest your Mana points into it to have a stronger card deck. Doing so enables you to beat your opponents and get a higher level of card deck. Besides, bff6bb2d33
